Message to policy and decision makers in Education

Teachers in primary schools definitely recognize the need of changing traditional and maintainable training approach not only on individual level (entrepreneur teachers) but also on organizational (schools (innovative or private)).

Teachers individually have started to use various training approaches in class to achieve better results in functional literacy and intuitively they understand that in parallel with academic knowledge learners have to form transferable skills. There is no any single schools in their regions (towns) in which all teachers are using one and the same alternative to the traditional teaching methodology. The only one alternative system is Montessori system and so well-known Montessori Schools in EU.

In Bulgaria there are innovative schools in which teachers are motivated to use innovative teaching approaches, but there is no any common understanding what is innovative. It could be innovative only for a teachers that starts to use in, and not to be innovative for the school, national educational system and standards, etc.

How alternative training approaches could be implemented ?

What teachers wanted to say to policy and decision makers:

- The number of pupils in class to be decreased – up to 15-20 pupils
- Teachers to have more freedom to use various teaching and training methods;
- To organize for teachers training courses giving knowledge about emotional intelligence, Multiple Intelligence and tools for using at class
- Teachers to have some knowledge about neurosciences, brain functionality and behavioral acts
- To train teachers to be an actress in class
- To establish new system for salary evaluation, credits depending on selected criteria motivating them to look for implementing different training approaches.
- To change the class environment – flexible class
- To motivate parents to take part in education of their children.
